The Castle on the Hill makes a strong first impression on Liam, both as a home for students and a symbol. Does it become a character in its own right?

Are there any characters you wish you could have given advice to? What would you have told them?

“Listen” features several strong female characters. Do you think they accurately reflect the way life was in a small town in Oklahoma during the 1930s?

Willie is elusive, but Liam eventually wins him over. Why do you think Willie was hard to get close to, and did that have an impact on how Liam approached his interviews?

One character in the book who gets a few moments in the spotlight is Dr. Dubois, the state director of the Federal Writers’ Project. Russell has said that Dubois is a reference to Angie Debo. How does she impact the story? Why do you think Russell changed her name from Debo to Dubois? Did his portrayal of Dubois do Debo justice?
